

REGAINED HEALTH FOR WEAK WOMEN AND SUFFERING MEN BY Chiropractic

THE NEW METHOD OF ANALYZING THE SYMPTOMS AND ADJUSTING THE PHYSICAL CAUSE OF DISEASE.

CHIROPRACTIC means the science of not only being able to analyze and locate the physical cause of disease, but also to provide an adequate means of adjusting or removing this cause promptly and permanently.

The normal body is a perfect machine. Just so long as one part operates in a proper mechanical relation to each other part, or is supplied with abundant power the result of this co-operation can be none other than Perfect Health.

L. E. Farnsworth, Salt Lake's prominent exponent of this science, locates the cause of your ailment. When the true cause of your trouble is found a great step towards the cure has been accomplished.

Then with common-sense adjustment he removes the cause of the trouble.

He does not charge for examination nor consultation. He will tell you honestly and frankly whether he can cure you.

In women's cases he is assisted by Mme. De Lane, an expert Masseuse and Chiropractor, who also gives all scalp, facial and body massages as well as chiropractic adjustments.

At least investigate. You owe that much to yourself. It costs you no more than a few moments of your time.

MEMBER OF ARRINGTON PLAYERS

Will Have Leading Role in
"Dora Thorne" at Bungalow This Week.

"I am just in love with Salt Lake," said Frances Brandt, who has been engaged by Walter Arrington to play the leading role in "Dora Thorne," to be given by the Bungalow Stock company next week. "I would like to stay here at least a year, and I know that if I stay that long I will never want to leave. I have just been long enough at the Bungalow to be thoroughly in love, too, with the cozy little Bungalow, the company, the orchestra, the stage crew, and especially with Joe, the theatre cat, but then I love all animals, even mice. Joe is deeply emotional and I am sure he returns my regard."

Miss Brandt is a pretty actress, who is certain to win a high degree of popularity in Salt Lake. She possesses a peculiar personal charm and has been a strong favorite wherever she appeared. Her reputation as one of the best dressed women in any stock company has preceded her, and she smilingly admitted a predilection for pretty gowns.

"I can't wear many 'swell' gowns next week, worse luck," she says, "but I have some beauties that I'm just dying to get a chance to wear, and one of them (but you mustn't breathe this to one of those much discussed pantaloons) which I will wear, just as sure as fate, if I get a part where I can do so. Then I have a pink messaline and gold gown that is pretty, and a corn colored embroidered dress, as well as a lavender velvet evening dress, all of which are pretty and which I am sure the ladies will appreciate."

Miss Brandt was leading lady for "Tim" Murphy last season. Before that she crowded a considerable experience into a short time, for she hasn't many years against her yet.

terial that is true to American life and clothes it with as much of France or Europe's excellence in technique as will not rob that material of one iota of its strength. Technical excellence of French play writing combined with the great emotional or optimistic of any other drama play writing, would seem to be a perfect product. The more French plays, even in translation, that America sees, the more rapidly we shall attain such a product."

Playing with the elements is one of the favorite pastimes of theatrical producers. No matter how satiated with levity an audience may find itself, the crash of thunder, the flash of lightning, course or the employment of any other device of the tricks of the magician producer always keeps up his sleeve, invariably will inspire awe and compel silent attention.

In staging the utterance of nature, however, the producer finds himself up to the neck in the problem of his unexplored theatrics within bounds. Beyond a certain point an audience is likely to become terrified, and the producer is entertained. It was a problem of this kind that Manager Singer encountered when he produced the storm scene in "The Goddess of Liberty."

There have been many thunder and lightning and rain storms pictured on the stage and most of them have contained about all the terror that ambitious craftsmen could devise. The Princess manager wanted to go that one better and after much deliberation he hit upon the scheme of having a bolt of lightning flash from the stage sky and thunder over a tree right over the heads of his prima donna and the leading man.

As the idea was worked out the crash comes after a series of terrifying claps of thunder and much use of the arc lights back stage. Accompanied by a noise like a falling gun shot, a ball of fire drops from above and strikes a tree trunk, leveling it to the earth in the Berkshire forest at night as if impelled by the withering hand of a doomsday destroyer.

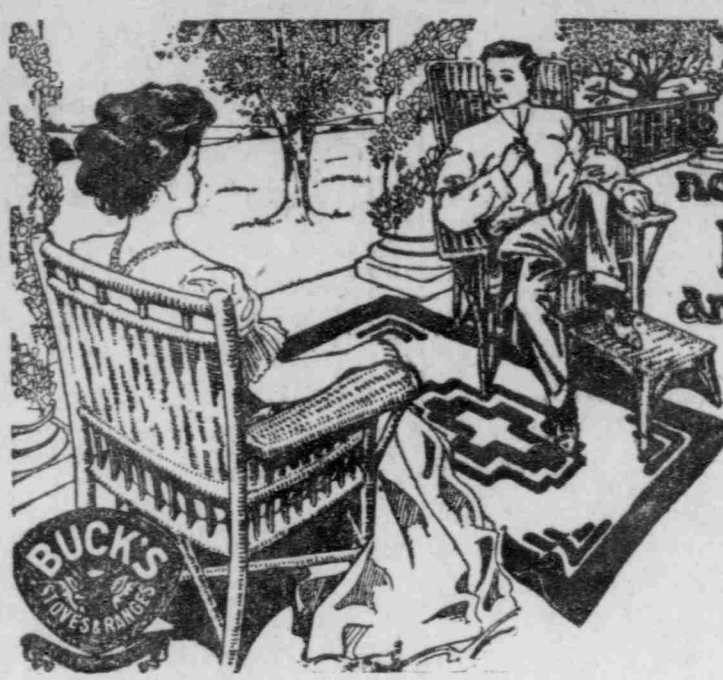

The faint-hearted in the audience might well look forward to the destruction of the Fisher and George Parsons, who are seeking shelter nearby, for they have been talking about death and taking a last farewell. But an end to their fears is hastened by a drenching rain that seems to afford relief to the mock nature at work.

The audiences seem to like the thrill of this scene, for they invariably applaud it. Managers have learned that play auditors like that sort of thing.

Richard Carle spent his vacation last summer at North Muskegon, Mich. at Aunt Ouisa Alvord's. He lived a regular countryman's life, mowing the lawn, taking the hay, pruning the trees and playing croquet. Incidentally, he allowed no razor to touch his cheek, and at the end of three weeks he attracted the living image of Convict 560. And by his whiskers hangs this tale:

One Saturday night Carle and Harry Cashman, also a comedian, motored over to Muskegon from Aunt Ouisa's. Carle wore a tattered khaki uniform (one from "The Tenderfoot" chorus), a combed cap, shoes run down at the heel, a linen duster and his whiskers. While the chauffeur was doing errands, Carle and Cashman waited for him on the main street. In order not to be conspicuous in their dilapidated attire, they retired into the darkness of a stairway, which led up to the office of Dr. Black, dentist. Dr. Black is a grouch, but the actors didn't know that.

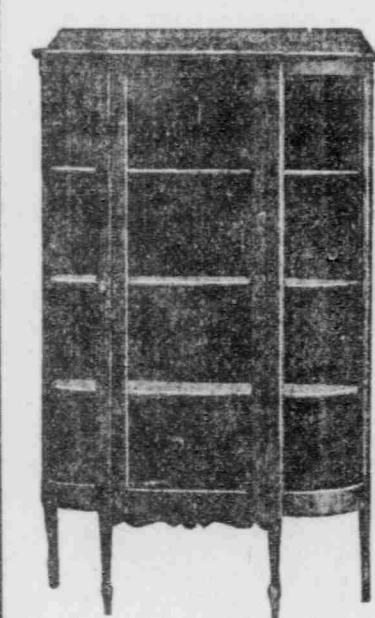

By and by a fussy little man came up, and advancing towards the two comedians, said sternly: "Why you two gentlemen kindly step one side or the other, so as not to interfere with business?" The two "hangers-on" said in chorus, "Certainly," and stepped down the stairs. The signs they discovered that the stairway led to Dr. Black's tooth emporium, and later they ascertained that Dr. Black was a grouch.

The day before Carle ended his vacation he visited the leading tenor artist of Muskegon and had himself transformed into his own whiskerless self. Then he took his machine and made a tour of Muskegon, finally driving up in front of the dentist's office. The chauffeur took his horn ostentatiously, to attract attention. Dr. Black heard the horn, looked out of his window, saw the elegant looking stranger alight, and heard him come upstairs. He didn't recognize in the visitor the man he had ordered off his stairway. He was all smiles as he greeted Carle. "Are you Dr. Black?" asked the comedian. "Yes, sir, I am Dr. Black, at your service."

"Are you a dentist?" "Yes, sir; a regular licensed dentist. What can I do for you?" Carle slowly took a toothpick out of his pocket. Handing it to the dentist, he said: "Will you please pick my teeth?"
